Statement of Interest

I am honored to stand for election to the ASBMB Council and to continue serving the Society in a strategic leadership capacity. As an ASBMB Fellow elected in 2024, I am committed to advancing ASBMB's mission and supporting a strong, inclusive, and sustainable scientific community.

I serve as Dean of the Graduate School of Biomedical Sciences at New York Medical College, Professor of Cell Biology and Anatomy, and Special Assistant to the Chancellor. I lead an extramurally funded research program focused on translational studies of cancer and rare diseases, and my scholarship also addresses mental health and well-being in academia.

My involvement with ASBMB spans my entire career. I currently serve on the Membership Committee, where I lead the Group Memberships and Chapters Task Force. I am a member of the Journal of Biological Chemistry Editorial Board, and my publications as both trainee and senior author have appeared in JBC and Molecular & Cellular Proteomics. I served two terms on the Women in Biochemistry and Molecular Biology Committee (2019–2024), where I developed Society-wide professional development programming, including “Nuggets of Wisdom for Academic Job Applications”. I have also served as a mentor in the IMAGE program since 2018 and now serve on its Steering Committee.

I have contributed to the ASBMB annual meeting as both a scientist and academic leader, including service as a session organizer, undergraduate poster judge and as a speaker on leadership development. I have further supported ASBMB's outreach through contributions to ASBMB Today, including “The COVID-19 Pandemic Is Squeezing Women Out of Science”, one of the most-read articles of 2020. Earlier in my career, I established an ASBMB undergraduate chapter at Yeshiva University and supported undergraduate participation in ASBMB meetings and honors programs.
